'Heavenly Blue'

Many years ago a home gardener found this early flowering version of sky blue morning glory with heart shaped leaves, and, recognizing its importance, saved its seeds. After a few years, it came to the attention of a Dutch seedsman who increased the stock and offered it under the name of 'Clarke's Early Heavenly Blue' in the early 1930s. It became the most planted morning glory, then and today.

NASTURTIUM

This annual comes in a bright array of colors with slightly funnel-shaped 5 petaled flowers and rounded green leaves. They are native to the mountainous areas in Central and South America. The bushy varieties are great in rock gardens and patio pots, the climbers are suitable for climbing up a fence, trellis, or large shrub or spilling down the sides of a container. The leaves and flowers are edible - brighten up salads. Prefers poor soils.

T. majus 'Trailing Mixture' ☀️🌙 36"H

Bright single flowers in a mixture of yellow, orange and red tones. Trailing habit is fabulous spilling out of window boxes and baskets. Thrives in poor soils. Needs no fertilizer and little water.
